

11/30/2010

Facebook flames spark real-world stabbing

Should the cops patrol social networks to anticipate potential violence in the real world?

AllFacebook

TOLDEO, Ohio — People take Facebook postings very seriously. Sometimes to excess, like reacting violently to posts. That led to a stabbing in Toledo, Ohio this week, according to an NBC affiliate there.

Aaron Calhoun wound up in Toldeo Hospital with non-life-threatening injuries after 20-year-old Taresa O'Neal hit him with a frying pan and followed that up with a stabbing.

The 25-year-old Calhoun had gone to O'Neal's home upset about a Facebook posting concerning his sister.

Read more on AllFacebook.

Do you think cops should patrol social networks in an effort to prevent violence from occurring in the real world? Tell us in the comment section below.

Taresa O'Neal, 25, was charged with stabbing a man because of a Facebook comment about her sister.

Back to previous page